In ancient Greece, life expectancy was 20 years.
In Medieval Europe, you lived until 30.
At the time of the Industrial Revolution in America, life expectancy was 38.
In 1900, most people didn't live past 47.

I'm so glad we live in the twenty-first century!

Because of advances in health care, we can see our children and grandchildren—and even great-grandchildren—grow up to become adults. We can see the fruits of our sacrifices and unconditional love and enjoy knowing them for decades.

Because of advances in transportation, we can travel the country, or even the world, easily, quickly, and affordably. Not only do we discover more about the world and ourselves, but we can also use our findings to challenge our preconceived notions of ourselves and others in order to evolve as individuals.

Because of advances in technology, we can keep in daily contact with those grandkids, learn more about anything we want on the Internet, and even marvel at the mysteries that lie in our galaxy, as well as our infinitesimal place within it. (We can even stay in our armchairs to do all of that, too, if we want!)

Because of advances in insurance, we have the means to afford home-based or even supervised health care for serious conditions if we need it, without compromising our family's financial stability. We can help preserve our retirement savings for the dreams we earmarked them for. We can save our family worry and give them peace of mind.

Some of us have considered long-term care insurance. As a result, are in the process or have completed a plan. Please call me at 317 579-9400, if you would like to start a conversation about it.

Sincerely,

David M Weidmayer, CFP®
